Why did people migrate to Britain?

In 1948, Britain was starting to recover from World War 2. Thousands of buildings had been bombed and lots of houses were destroyed - it all needed to be rebuilt. After the war, thousands of Caribbean men and women answered an advert to come to Britain where there were lots of different jobs to do (including manufacturing, public transport and the NHS). Many people felt a sense of duty and were also eager to migrate to Britain because there were better job opportunities.

Baroness Floella Benjamin
She is a Trinidadian-British actress, author, television presenter, singer, business-woman and politician.

Sam King MBE
He worked for the RAF, and later worked for the Royal Mail. In 1983/84 he was elected Mayor of the London Borough of Southwark.

Benjamin Zephaniah
His parents travelled to Britain as part of the Windrush generation. He writes poems and novels for adults, teens and children.

How has the Windrush changed and improved British culture?

The Caribbean community brought an explosion of dance, art, writing and music which would transform British culture. Many of the music styles you listen to today have roots in Caribbean London.
